To compare the antinociceptive and side effects of oxycodone in a short time and to determine whether the drug is a first-line agent for management of neuropathic pain. Opioid drugs have high efficacy against neuropathic pain. However, many patients complain of side effects, including nausea and vomiting. The efficacy of oxycodone in postherpetic neuralgia (PHN) has not been evaluated. In a randomized, placebo-controlled study, 55 PHN patients were randomly assigned to two groups: oxycodone 20 mg/day or paracetamol 1 g/day orally. Pain severity was assessed by an 11-point numerical rating scale. Visceral pain (2-point verbal rating scale) and quality of life were assessed using the visual analogue scale. Weekly assessments included side effects. The pain score decreased and quality of life improved during a 12-week study period. The oxycodone group showed more significant improvement in pain and quality

C4D Plugin Animation Keyframe Baking. Nitro4D, the official blog of the Autodesk news team, delivers the latest news, software announcements, feature reviews, and developer insights for CAD software and workflows. I'm looking for a plugin or addon for Cinema 4D that allows me to animate pre-baked normal maps in a vertex-based animation process. [b]EDIT:[/b] I'm still looking, but from what I read/read about so far here on this forum, it doesn't seem possible. Maybe there are plugins like that for other programs? I've never used anything other than C4D, but I'd love to know! A: To my understanding it isn't possible to bake normals with the underlying "3D Surface" option. It's either "3D Curves", which is a bit tricky to setup for your needs, or "Mesh/Mesh Maker" which will render your 3D objects in Cinema 4D as a mesh (basic image, with no subdivision, no smooth corners etc). These options simply bake meshes and export them as a bitmap. In order to bake normals onto your objects, you'll have to setup a "3D Volume" and use your mesh as the background (for example setting the background to "Plane"), then use the Volume to bake your normals onto the mesh. If you want to do everything by vertex animation, you'll have to have a 3D model in Cinema 4D, and use the "Mesh Maker" as described above. In Cinema 4D, an object is already a "tridimensional object", with tris, textures, etc. So no, there isn't a plug-in for Cinema 4D that will allow you to use pre-made normals on an object.
